CATULLI CARMINA

ODI ET AMO

I hate and love. You ask how such a thing can be.
I do not know but I feel the agony and I suffer.

CARL ORFF

MISER CATULLE

Wretched Catullus, stop playing the fool and admit that what is lost is lost. Once bright days shone on you, when you would follow wherever the girl led, loved as no girl ever was loved. There you tasted those joys, so many and so merry, which you desired and the girl was not unwilling. Truly the days once shone bright upon you. Now she is no longer willing, and you, too, powerless, must abjure desire; nor must you pursue the entreating one, nor live unhappy, but with firm-set mind endure, be firm. Farewell, my mistress, now Catullus is firm. No more will he pursue and entreat you. But you will know regret, when your favors are no longer desired. Faithless one, go your way! What kind of life remains for you? Now who will visit you? Who will find you beautiful? Whom will you love? Whose girl will you now be called? Whom will you kiss? Whose lips will you bite? But you, Catullus, remain hardened and cold.
